

Home front!

6.2. Compared to what was in the last issue, I am in fact 'worse', not more! (Glad as in 'gameplay').

When he comes around home now,
perhaps long like to ask you,
so, where CAN he come his specially,
there's too much garden in the road...

Then down the chimney stack.
Climb right up to the roof-top!
How come you get with his back?
But if you were in the danger,

And you're in one pot head!
One up! and then do a quick down,
the way too much up and then,
for everyone, all the roof-top!

To find on Christmas Day,
when he brings pots for him and pots
where you come his specially,
Have him come now!

Dear FHC, Here is my entry for the autumn competition.

in this way.
I've to make all my correspondence computerized, I wish, I mean this way as I find it hard If it is too people to make in

in this way.

When you find I am comfortable computerized but I wanted to

I know I can take for the

Wanted to spend more money

I noticed an article in this month

Just towards the FHC.

I am writing my first letter after

Dear Sir

YorriMirror

pnitiW Writing

One curious characteristic of some left-handed writers is their ability to produce mirror writing, sometimes quite spontaneously.

Mirror writing is that form of script which appears normal when it is reflected in a mirror. Evidence suggests that children are more likely to produce mirror writing than adults.

Lewis Carroll, an Oxford maths don and creator of Alice in Wonderland, wrote mirror script letters to his young friends, and Leonardo da Vinci, whose genius needs no elaboration, kept his notebooks in mirror writing because he found it relaxing after a hard day in the studio!

Here are some letters beautifully written in mirror script by Left-Handers Club Members. You can read them with the attached mirror.

WHY NOT USE THE NOTEBOOKS PROVIDED, AND HAVE A GO AT MIRROR WRITING YOURSELF?

overstick mirror written letters here